Hank wanted a drink. Hank saw a pink sink. The sink was full of clean, cold water.

Mom came back and looked around. Mom saw Hank and the sand and the water.

Mom said, "Let's make a sand castle." And that is just what they did!
Hank felt bold. The water was cold. Hank dipped his hands into the clean, cold water.

Sand spilled out of the pan. Sand spilled all around.

Hank pushed his hands into the sand. Down, down, down into the pink pan.

Hank took a drink. Plunk, plank, plink. Clean, cold water dripped everywhere.
Hank got his gold tank. In the sink the gold tank sank. Clean, cold water dripped everywhere.

"What can I do now?" asked Hank. "Let’s think," said Mom. Mom found some sand. She put a mound in a pink pan. But Hank did not care if water dripped everywhere. Hank wanted to drink from the pink sink.

"It is time to clean up," said Mom. Hank found a mop. He mopped all around the pink sink.
Hank got his pink toy bank. In the sink the pink bank sank. Clean, cold water dripped everywhere.

But Hank did not care if water dripped everywhere. He wanted to play with the tank in the pink sink.

Hank sank other things in the sink. In went a shield, some chalk, and a milk jug. Water spilled all over the floor.

But Hank did not care if water dripped everywhere. Hank wanted to play with the tank and the bank in the pink sink.
